T. JOHNSON

To Take a Position With Mc-Claid & Armstrong Next Year.

J. T. Johnson, who has been for ten years sexton at Riverside Cemetery, will on January 5 become identified with the monument house of McClaid & Armstrong, taking the with his family into his own house on the corner of Liberty and Second streets. His long connection with the cemetery business makes him peculiarly fitted for his new work of son. soliciting monument orders, placing the monuments, markers or curbing and doing such other work as the Jr. firm of McClaid & Armstrong has made a specialty, During Mr. Johnson's incumbency as sexton, he has buried nearly 900 persons, which all. shows the great opportunities offered to an up-to-date firm in selling monuments. Nearly all the monuments in the Cemetery have been placed by McClaid & Armstrong since they have been in business, some of the more imposing ones, of granite and marble costing many Profs. A. C. Kuykendall and hundreds of dollars. TEN CARLOADS

Of Dressed Christmas Turkeys Will Leave Hopkinsville For Eastern Markets.

The packing season for Christmas turkeys is now in its height and by Saturday night the most of the shipments to the eastern markets will have been made. It is estimated that ten carloads will be the December shipment by Peter Fox & Sons, or something like 250,000 pounds of dressed poultry. The price has been from 13½ to 14½ cents. It is the biggest season on record here. The November shipments were 100,000 pounds, about four carloads.

Silverware Makes An Ideal Gift

Whether you are contemplating a gift that cost little or much, Silverware is always acceptable. In buying Silverware it is well to choose standard makes--it is well to buy silverware from a store that is satisfied with a small margin of profit.

We believe that we can make more money by selling a great deal of silverware at a small margin of profit rather than an occasional piece at a big margin.

This principle--this belief accounts for our being able to sell the same silver for less money and better silver for the same money than you can buy elsewhere.

We ask the opportunity to show you what we have and how reasonable we can sell it.

He walked quickly and yet without smiled to him from victoria and landaulette, men nodded in the perfunctory manner of pal to pal, and Christopher Hill responded to each carefully, courteously, even gaily. Social amenities must be observed even by the man condemned to death.

Though an enthusiast at games Hill had been an idle man up to the present and yet was not without his Barber Shop ideals and ambitions; he was young and well off, and until a month ago had believed himself possessed of superabundant health.

Above all, though owning few near relations, he had a large circle of friends, and there had lately loomed large on his horizon the girl with the gray eyes. He winced when he thought of her. It would be bitter enough to leave it all, God knew, when the time came. But this last thought was the first with real power to stab. He who believed himself invulnerable realized his hurt now. He tried to recall the doctor's exact words, but instead could only see the queer scar on the right cheek

He had always, with the sound mind of the healthy man, condemned suicide as a phase of insanity. Now he saw it placed in a new and relative light, and merely as a hastening forward of the inevitable.

Mollie, his little sister, would grieve for him, but there was no one else, and Mollie had her husband and a small son.

But there was no one else to care, unless perhaps- That thought came again with a new and unexpected

Christopher Hill was not an irreligious man. His feelings lay all the deeper for being unexpressed. Yet had a parson stood in front of him condemning his present frame of mind Christopher would have been genuinely astonished. A man's life was his own. He had nothing to be ashamed of, but to drag on six months in hell and then die in torture was unthinkable. He had seen men suffer thus before.

Then he turned the corner by the broad walk and came upon the girl with the gray eyes.

She was accompanied by a maid carrying some books and leading a small dog. Hill stopped and spoke

"Are you very busy? Won't you walk round the gardens once, and let ne see you home?"

She said a word to the maid, who went on with the little dog. The girl turned, and she and Hill went

She never even knew he was ill." Christopher started. A certain haste. Pretty women bowed and parallel in the story and his own case struck him.

"What happened in the end?" he

"He died," said the girl softly. "And afterward everyone realized what a hero he had been, suffering on like that and saying nothing. I suppose it's what you would call rather an impossible tale, but it's so interesting."

The careless adjective cut him like a knife. Never, had she but known, would the girl have used it then. He spoke deliberately, not grace to the regiment, sir." looking at her.

"Suppose," he said carefully, "that John Smith had not chosen to live on and suffer, but had put a bullet through his brain, as you say h wanted to, what would you have called him then?"

She flashed an indignant face on him. Never before had he seen her thus aroused.

"Fancy you asking me that. A coward, of course-nothing else." He accepted the word silently.

"Do you mind telling me why?" he asked gently.

"It isn't for me to judge," she said wistfully. "But if it was a man I-I cared for, and he did "Shot himself?"

Yes, shot himself. I think it would break my heart—a coward," she almost whispered the word to

"But extenuating circumstances" What were the doctor's exact the suffering—the agony of waiting, how is that to be borne? And a "Six months at most . . . no man's life is his own and matters to no one else."

"It would have mattered to me," she said steadily. "John Smith had his mother, and there is always playing with my Tommy all he wants some one."

Her tones conveyed nothing. She was looking straight ahead to where a glitter among the trees disclosed squadron of cavalry that London has affectionately ridiculed in a nickname. The "Tins" riding home to Knightsbridge barracks. And they would ride again tomorrow, in week, a month, six months.

Need the doctor have hinted at future suffering when there was this? At her father's door he paused.

"No, thanks, I won't come in. And goodby, if I don't see you again." She gave him her hand and her eyes asked—all unconsciously—a question the man dared not answer.

It put the crown on his sufferings.

"Goodby, then-and good luck." Christopher was delayed at the corner of Hamilton place by a crowd that had stopped to acclaim a great military hero. With medals breast an old man rode by, receiving Fourthly?"

Clark & Wallace Addition

Will Be Sold to the Highest Bidder Thursday, Dec. 18, 1913, at 2 P. M.

The average citizen in Hopkinsville does not realize the value of the "Old Show Grounds" as it is generally known and the changes that have been made since the last show about 4 years ago.

But it is a matter of public record that 6 or 7 of the best business men of Hopkinsville have made from $5,000 to $20,000 each on this property, and a number of them still own a considerable interest in this land. In the past four years not less than $75,000 has been spent for the improvement of this property. And you will be offered an opportunity to buy at your own price the CLARK & WALLACE ADDITION consisting of 9 valuable lots and 11 houses and lots which have the advantage of good streets and pavements and will be sold at prices that will enable you to make a profit even greater than those who have started this development. So don't fail to take advantage of this wonderful opportunity. This property is located on Central Avenue between Jones & McKee Streets.

Come out and look it over, see what we have to offer. It will enable you to make the best guess for which we will give $10.00 in gold, $2.50 each to the next four nearest guesses and $1.00 each to the next five nearest guesses.
